Share your ideas on the following questions with 1-2 colleagues online (5 min):

- How much «experimentation» in teaching and learning happened in your institution during the last months?
- How strong a force is necessary to induce change in higher-education teaching and learning?
- On which levels (micro, meso, macro, educational development) is change (forced or not forced) most likely?

SFDN Conference 2021

Cultivating an environment of experimentation in teaching and learning: Tensions between coping and design in times of crises and beyond

The 2020s started off with a "bang" in tertiary teaching and learning: A health issue forced higher education institutions across the globe to change their everyday teaching and learning practices towards remote, online modes of instruction.

On the one hand, the emergency-remote approach ensured continuing teaching and learning in 2020

Paper presentations: Paper sessions are oral presentations ... discussion with the audience. Each ... 15 to 20 minutes ...

DisqSpace: One DisqSpace room contains three to four contributions from, ideally, both practice and research-based perspectives, on the same (broad) topic or theme. All contributions are expected to be present the whole time period of the DisqSpace session, so that participants can easily change rooms during the session. Contributions may be presented as posters, interactive live presentations or similar creative formats, with a strong focus on facilitating discussion among participants and authors.
